WINE DOWN ON THE FARM

Cambridge City—On September 18, join Indiana Landmarks at their Huddleston Farmhouse for Wine Down on the Farm, an event that blends art, a locally sourced harvest spread, and the story of the Richmond Group—one of Indiana’s first art colonies.

Also called the Richmond School, the collective of late nineteenth—and early twentieth—century artists clustered around Richmond, Indiana, and developed a unique impressionist style. Richmond Group Artists, Out of the Silence, a recent book by Shaun Dingwerth, director of the Richmond Art Museum (RAM), will be available for purchase, and works from the RAM highlighting the Richmond Group’s story will be on display.

During the event, artists from the modern-day Richmond collective will be on the grounds, painting en plein air. Their artwork from the day will be available for purchase. Wine down on the Farm costs $35 per Indiana Landmarks member, $50 per non-member. Tickets available online at wine-down2014.eventbrite.com.

HISTORIC HOMES LOST

Greenfield—Several properties have been demolished in the wake of the Potts Ditch project in Greenfield. One, 218 N. State St., was demolished despite efforts from Indiana Landmarks to save the property.

Main Street (the National Road) will be closed entirely at Spring Street from Aug. 25– Sept. 9 during construction work for Potts Ditch. This will be the first of several closures relating to the year-long ditch project.

The Indiana National Road Association supports new infrastructure, and updating of existing systems, but encourages the preservation of significant and sound historic buildings and homes.

Historic properties define the character of a community, and should be preserved.
